POV VVS

Manipur peace elusive

In Manipur, the search for peace remains fraught with challenges, exacerbated by the rapid spread of misinformation through social media and various news outlets. Recently, a false report claimed that 900 militants had crossed into Manipur from Myanmar, a narrative that gained traction despite its implausibility. Such rumors fuel existing tensions among the state's diverse religious, ethnic, and racial groups, further complicating an already volatile situation.

Since the outbreak of violence between communities last May, over 200 lives have been lost, including many unarmed civilians. The state has seen the deployment of 60,000 to 70,000 Indian security forces, yet the conflict continues to rage, highlighting the limitations of these efforts.

Political dynamics add another layer of complexity. Factions within the state government are struggling with dissent, leading to more hardliner positions that hinder potential peace negotiations. The fear of territorial losses in any future arrangement has intensified the conflict, with both Meitei and Kuki-Zo groups vying for control over mixed areas.

The state government's recent calls to end agreements with surrendered Kuki militants could unleash further violence, releasing trained fighters back into the fray. This precarious situation underscores the urgent need for decisive intervention from the central government.

Many question why a nation with advanced military capabilities struggles to manage the unrest in such a small region, especially when it is prepared to mediate international conflicts. The disconnect between external diplomatic efforts and the ongoing crisis in Manipur raises critical concerns about governance and effectiveness in the Northeast.

Ultimately, the absence of peace in Manipur reflects a broader challenge for India—addressing internal conflicts with the same urgency it applies to international issues. The pity is we are ready to initiate talks and mediate between Russia and Ukraine, proclaiming to assist in resolving the war in Gaza to save civilians and children from further killing. But Manipur is aflame!

Without immediate and concerted action, the "Land of the Jewel" risks continuing its descent into chaos.

World Heart Day to address cardiovascular challenges

Chennai, Sep 30: As cardiovascular diseases continue to rise in India, it is increasingly vital to emphasize the importance of awareness and improved medical treatments to promote heart health nationwide. This year's World Heart Day theme, "Use Heart for Action," brings together leading healthcare professionals to discuss effective strategies and treatment options aimed at raising awareness and enhancing heart health across the population. Dr. Rajpal Abhiachand

Chairman and Head of the Department of Cardiology, G. Kuppuswamy Naidu Memorial Hospital, Coimbatore emphasized the importance of early diagnosis by saying, "For high-risk patients, such as those with a history of heart disease, regular screening is essential. By identifying the condition in its early stages, we can manage and monitor it before it becomes life-threatening. TAVI treatment has revolutionized the treatment landscape, offering a less invasive alternative to open-heart surgery."
